A recurrent theme of the Greek crisis ever since it erupted in late 2009 is that both the Greeks and the euro creditor countries have been reluctant to consider that lessons from previous emerging market crises might apply to them. After all, Greece was not a developing country but rather a member of the euro.

Timeline: The unfolding eurozone crisis - BBC News

The eurozone (debt) crisis was caused by (i) the lack of a (n) (effective) mechanisms / institutions to prevent the build-up of macro-economic and, in some countries, fiscal imbalances and (ii) the lack of common eurozone institutions to effectively absorb shocks (also see Rabobank, 2012; Rabobank, 2013 ). Lower borrowing costs following the entry into the euro area led to large intra-eurozone capital flows, primarily in the form of banks loans, resulting in significant increases of ...
